Biographical Notes

a Marca, Pablo (Brown University, United States)

Pablo a Marca is a Ph.D. candidate in Italian Studies at Brown University. His research focuses on the convergence between posthumanism and European fairy tales in the modern period. Utilizing methods from animal studies, ecocriticism, and posthumanism, he shows how popular narratives, and fairy tales in particular, are in dialogue with the posthuman epoch. The fantastic and magical world of fairy tales has much in common with the 21st century in embedding non-anthropocentric ideas, from reconsidering the categorical division between humans and animals to a deeper consideration of the role of humans in the environment.

Petocz, Orsolya Katalin (University of Cambridge, United Kingdom)

Orsolya Katalin Petocz is a PhD researcher in the University of Cambridge Italian Department and works with Professor Robert S. C. Gordon and Professor Emma Wilson. On a blurred line between visual art, (moving) image, and writing, she explores possibilities of queer testimony and the expression of trauma, between invisibility and (hyper)visibility of marginalised (queer) experiences. From Holocaust memory to testimonies of the HIV-AIDS crisis, she pushes towards an analysis of contemporary resurfacings of memory between Italian and Francophone works. She intertwines philosophical, politico-philosophical and literary analysis for the elaboration of a methodological approach to testimony of ‘creative comparative practice’.
